

In the rulings about portability of telephone numbers, it refers to contractual obligations which remain binding, but does not address the issue of cost for moving a number. Is this to be at no charge or is there an amount set by the FCC or a limit to the amount that can be charged? Without this, a company can charge anything they want making it cost prohibitive to take an existing number and switch companies.

Please comment

Thanks

Heidi Blye